

Having finally taken a moment to sit back and reflect on Kaushal Niraula's impressive presentation at The Mayfair Hotel last night, I thought I had better share a bit of the glitz and glamour with you.

After traipsing across the city from The Crown to Green Park, there was, admittedly, one thing on our minds – a drink. I was actually gasping for a cold glass of water above anything else, but when we were presented with a tall flute of champagne on arrival I wasn't going to say no. We quickly followed the mesmerising sounds of klangkarussell, sonnentanz – camera's at the ready.

The setting, a luxury glass roofed room was torn between a little piece of Dubai and Gatsby's front lawn. I was much more inclined to go with the Gatsby theme when I saw Niraula's collection of beautiful suits. Real life models stood like statues on podiums, each donned in a different and contrasting ensemble from the next. From striking red, to bottle green, to pale grey and lilac, carefully paired classically with bow ties, or casually with soft polo shirts.

The SS14 collection is entirely hand tailored, shown off particularly in the form of velvet blazers and strangely alluring all over check suits of the finest cashmere. It felt almost strange to be there in my high street attire, albeit largely because a number of guests were casually milling about in floor length evening gowns.

By my third glass of bubbly I was more than a bit relieved when presented with a tray of garlic prawns and dipping sauce. The chicken satays didn't go a miss either, or the miniature fish and chips. Much like one of Gatsby's guests, we were strangers in the hands of a good and lingering host, subject to sites of beauty and privilege. The whole affair was very intimate and it was easily find yourself chatting to PR, organizers, models and other eager press.

Words: Corin Jackson | Fashion Week Press | @CorinLeigh

Images: Sebastian Mccluskey | Fashion Week Photographer | @mcluskey1

0 comments

Add a comment...

Comment

Facebook social plugin

